The other aspect of our Constitution, to which I attach the greatest importance, is that our Constitution sets-up a secular state. In our country, we have no official religion. In our country every man and every woman, irrespective of his class, his community and his race, can look forward to any office and can enjoy the same rights as anybody else does. We have no two classes of citizenship. We have no getters in our country where we shut up people and deny them right of citizenship. We have equality before the law, and it is not merely a theoretical equality, it is a practical equality which is enforced by courts of law. Just as in the case of democratic state you need a democratic spirit, in the case of a secular state you also need a secular spirit. No institution can be worked merely by the latter. You need the spirit which inspires those institutions and if we really believe in secularism, if we really believe that our country should remain a secular state, we ought to have the secular spirit and the secular outlook, and that spirit and that outlook to my mind is the belief that one's religion should not intrude in matters which are public or political or civic.
